

Student B

The committee meeting at your house last weekend was successful, with one exception: your colleague (Student A) turned up in what were obviously very expensive new clothes. The coffee accident was unfortunate, but your colleague was talking animatedly and waving a biscuit about at the time, so your dog really isn't to blame. Your colleague left immediately after the coffee incident. At the end of the meeting, the committee voted your wife/husband onto the committee in the position of treasurer. He/She only accepted because there was no one else to take on the role. It's not really his/her thing, but he/she said he'd/she'd do it to help the rest of the committee out. Taking on this time-intensive position will mean a lot of book-keeping work, visits to banks, tax advisors, etc. for your husband/wife. On top of this, your colleague wants to meet this afternoon to talk to you. You don't really know why.