

1. Magic Restroom Cafe, Los Angeles

The idea of sitting on a toilet in public is the stuff of nightmares, but that hasn't stopped the Magic Restroom making loos the focus of its new themed restaurant in LA. In fact, toilet-themed restaurants are nothing new – Taiwan's' Modern Toilet where chocolate ice-cream is served in toilet-shaped dishes is well-documented. Inspired by its success, Magic Restroom owner YoYo Li has introduced toilets as seats and a mix of Asian and western food – like zha jiang mian, named "constipation" on the menu, braised pork over rice, ("smells-like-poop"), and sundaes like chocolate "black poop" served, of course, in miniature toilet bowls. Revolting and disturbing in equal measure.

2. Fish Cafe, Vietnam

A cafe in Vietnam is named Fish Cafe. Well, but if you thought this was a cafe where you can binge on different types of fish, you're wrong. Cafe Ikan is a three-floor coffee shop. The first floor looks pretty normal, but the second and third floors are flooded with ankle-deep water, filled with swimming fish. One of the floors is dedicated to smaller fish, while the other is teaming with carp. So, you can take your pick who you want to have your coffee with. All you need to do is take your shoes off, sanitise your feet and take your seats, with fish very likely to nibble at your toes. The cafe also claims to use a 24-hour water filtration system to keep the water clean.

3. Disaster Café, Barcelona

Normally, we are terrified of earthquakes, but at Disaster Cafe in Spain, diners pay to experience a simulated 7.8 quake, while enjoying a meal. The cafe is very normal-looking on the outside. But once you step in, you'll realize things aren't as normal as they seemed. Firstly, the staff wear construction helmets and other safety equipment, and when the food comes you'll also realize the dishes are a lot heavier than normal. And even before you realize, the lights go off, everything starts shaking and women are heard screaming. There's nothing you can do but wait it out and hope for the best. Unlike during natural quakes of this magnitude, there are never any serious injuries at Disaster Café. In fact all you have to remember is not to wear your finest outfit, because spilled drinks and food are very common here.

4. Dans le Noir, Paris

Run entirely by blind waiters who lead guests to their seats with casual ease, the Dans le Noir restaurant is designed to introduce people to a new world of the senses. The 'surprise menu' is created by famous French chef Olivier Romain. Diners sit together at long tables and must rely on their senses to eat their three-course meal. Simple things like filling your glass, talking with your friends or using utensils become utterly different when surrounded by total darkness. Customers are known to raise their voices when they can't see their friends, and waiters will sometimes remind them that they're shouting! It's an experience like no other.

Adapted from: <https://curlytales.com/10-of-the-worlds-weirdest-restaurants-that-are-sure-to-make-you-go-eww/>