Dear Diary (Back From Isle Esme)

February 21, 2009

While at Isle Esme, Edward _____ (show) me how great it feels to be under the clear blue water with the ability to go without oxygen indefinitely. Everything under the water _____ (be) so clear to me. Every grain of sand _____ (sparkle) from a different direction as the sun _____ (beam) down into the water. Every bubble _____ (vanish) just as fast as it came. Every creature _____ (have) a different texture, clearly visible to me, even under water. It _____ (be) incredible. Aside from swimming with the porpoises, we _____ (watch) the sunset every single night and _____ (spend) time in the small jungle. Everything _____ (be) so vibrant. The colours on the parrots, the texture of their feathers, the green of the jungle, the suns rays beaming off the water. It _____ (be) all so beautiful. I vaguely remember

Kaure _____ (be) there. The cleaning lady who is quite frankly petrified of Edward, who Edward believes is onto something. When she first _____ (see) me, she hastily _____ (mumble) a bunch of words I _____ (can not) understand, _____ (look) me up and down, then again... and again, and finally _____ (run) off once a single bead of sweat _____ (begin) to drip down the side of her face. I suspect she sees that I am different now. She suspects I am one of them.

When Edward and I _____ (return) back to Forks, we _____ (can not) wait to see Nessie. For the first time in my life, I _____ (understand) why Charlie would get so excited to see me every summer, and why it _____ (hurt) him so much to see me go back home after my visits with him. We _____ (miss) Nessie so much and it _____ (hurt) to be away from her. Aside from all of our fun, we are happy to be back with our family.
